Proceed to 2 of 5 below. 02 of 05 Don Ramey Logan / Wikimedia Commons / CC BY 4.0 Walking along the park on Ocean Drive three blocks north, towards 10th Street. On your left will be the Art Deco Welcome Center. It is home to the Miami Design Preservation League, the group formed in 1976 to preserve and restore the historic Art Deco beach buildings. In those days, the beach was experiencing a difficult time. It was a popular playground for the wealthy in the 1920s (hence the architecture of Art Deco) and was a mafia hangout in the 1950s. In 1979, however, it was a mecca for the elderly and poor, and many of the luxury hotels became nursing homes. Beachgoers of old remember when octogenars in rocking chairs were a common sight on Ocean Drive. The Beach Conservation League feared many of the historic hotels had been destroyed by developers. So they brought together architects, businessmen, politicians and residents to help revitalize the area and made headlines in 1980 when artist Andy Warhol asked the group for a guided tour of the area. In 1984, the whole world was introduced to Miami Beach when the hit TV show Miami Vice used many of the neighborhood's buildings as a backdrop. The Art Deco welcome center has books, brochures and even South Beach tours if you want more information on the area's history. In January, it is the focal point of Art Deco Weekend, a festival dedicated to the unique architecture. There is also an extensive gift shop in the center, located at 1001 Ocean Drive. Proceed to 3 of 5 below. 03 of 05 Busà Photo/Getty Images from the Art Deco Welcome Center, cross Ocean Drive and go north one block, to ocean 1116. Stop at a large white mansion, where many tourists will be photographed of the dented iron gate and tall bushes. This is Ocean Drive's most notorious residence. In 1992, as Art Deco timuri worked to clean up a rough beach area, Italian fashion designer Gianni Versace visited South Beach, saw the house and fell in love with it. He lovingly restored the house to its original glory and brought international celebrities to celebrate there. (Think Madonna and Elton But Versace's party ended in July 1997 when he was shot on the steps of the mansion by serial killer Andrew Cunanan, who later committed suicide in a Miami Beach houseboat. The house was bought in 2000 by a media mogul and has since become a private party-only mansion. That may be why some tourists linger near the main gate, hoping to catch a glimpse of a star or two, but others like to take a picture of the macabre location where Versace was shot. The heritage of the estate was part of the south coast bind long before Versace, however. It was built in 1930 by architect and philanthropist Alden Freeman, who designed it in tribute to the oldest house in the Western Hemisphere, located in Santo Domingo. The Spanish-style building, known as Casa Casuarina, features an interior courtyard. Of course, only a lucky few are able to see the inside (rumour has it that Versace's pool of 10,000 mosaics is untouched), but you can still admire the estate from the pavement. Proceed to 4 of 5 below. 04 of 05 Accordion/Wikimedia Commons/CC BY 3.0 from Versace Mansion, walk west on 11th Street two blocks, then turn left on Washington Avenue. Walk one block, and on the corner of Washington and 10th, you can see the Wolfsonian Museum. The Wolfsonian was founded in 1986 to document, preserve and show the collection of Mitchell Wolfson Jr., which had an impressive range of furniture, paintings, books, industrial art and empara. Wolfson donated his collection and museum to the Florida International University in 1997. The museum's collection consists largely of artifacts from North America and Europe from 1885 to 1945, with an emphasis on design history. The collection includes items from the British arts and crafts movement, political propaganda and Italian nouveau art. Recent exhibitions include the art of political poster, and art and design in the modern era. For hours and information about entry, read the Wolfsonian Museum of Art visitor guide. Proceed to 5 of 5 below. 05 of 05 Hubo /Wikimedia Commons/CC BY 3.0 strolled north along Washington Avenue and people watching. It's one of South Beach's most colourful streets, with tanned tourists mingling with diverse locals. If your energy signals, stop at any of the small Cuban markets and buy a café con lech or cortadito - a small of powerful espresso and keep walking. When you hit Espanola Way (just after 14th Street), cross Washington and enter the street four blocks, pedestrian-only. Once surrounded by Art Deco buildings, you'll feel like you've been moved to a small village in Spain; The architecture here is definitely Mediterranean, down to the barrel-backed tile and pink plaster. Capito, look at the large peach-colored building on the corner of Washington and Espanola. The hotel is called Clay Hotel and is part of a smooth, youth hostel with a Mexican restaurant on the ground floor. It was a 10-year-long Built in 1925 as a haven for artists and boemen. You may recognize this building from the TV; It was the site of the first and last episodes of Miami Vice. Stroll along Espanola Way and come across art galleries, clothing boutiques and other unique shops. At least two yoga studios are among the restaurants. On weekends, a farmers' market and outdoor shopping bazaar add to the foreign feel. The perfect place to finish your walking tour is right at the end of the street, at tapas y Tintos Spanish restaurant, at 448 Espanola Way. This tiny tapas bar offers a real Spanish menu (the owner is from Spain), including tiny plates of delicious fish, olives, Spanish tortillas. Make your way to one of the bar's outdoor sidewalk tables under a stucco arch and order (or jug) of sangria. Chances are there'll be some kind of Latin jazz coming from the inside. Immerse yourself in the south coast atmosphere and enjoy themselves. Enjoy.
